Hi Kelly,
How’s life? Are you having a good summer?
We’re having a great time here in Hawaii. It’s an amazing place! We’re staying in a beautiful hotel near the beach. It has a swimming pool with palm trees around it. I go swimming every day.
I had my first surfing lesson yesterday. It was fantastic. I was a little nervous because the waves were big, but my instructor helped me a lot. He says I’m really good at surfing.
OK, that’s all for now. I’ll see you soon.
Miss you,
Amy

More than 1,000 years ago, the early Polynesians were an adventurous people who were excellent sailors. They navigated using the sun and the stars. Sometimes whole villages sailed in their longboats to live on deserted islands. This is the story of Takai and his village.

Takai was waiting on the beach for his father, Arama, to return from fishing. When he saw his father’s wooden canoe, he ran into the water. Almost immediately, he realized his father wasn’t happy.

“What’s wrong?” Takai asked. “There are no fish. There’s nothing to take back to the village! There’s nothing for us to eat,” Arama replied.

Takai was twelve and knew his father needed help. “I can go with you to look for fish. Please, Father. I can help!” His father knew the dangers, but he could not go back to the village without food. “Alright, but you have to do exactly what I tell you.” Takai was very proud that his father let him help. He jumped into the canoe and took an oar. He and his father rowed the canoe away from the land until it disappeared. After a long time, Arama put down his oar, and looked up at the sky. Takai could see that his father was worried. “There’s a storm coming. We should go back.”

But it was too late. Dark clouds covered the sun, and the wind started to blow. They tried to row the canoe back to land, but the waves were too big. The canoe started moving up and down violently. Suddenly, a wave broke over the canoe, and Takai hit his head on the side. He lost consciousness.

When he woke up, Takai saw his father sitting beside him. He wasn’t rowing. He was just looking at the sea. “What happened?” Takai asked. “You hit your head in the storm. And we lost the oars,” Arama said. “Now we have to go where the currents take us,” he explained as he looked at the horizon. Then Takai saw something high in the sky. “What’s that, Father?” he asked. “It’s a seagull,” Arama shouted excitedly. “It means that we’re close to land!”

The name Polynesia in Greek means "many islands." Polynesia includes a huge triangle of more than 1,000 islands in the Pacific Ocean. The Hawaiian Islands are at the top of the triangle. New Zealand is the western point of the triangle. Easter Island is at the eastern point. Can you find and label them on the map? Other famous Polynesian islands are Tahiti, Fiji, Toga and Samoa.
Easter Island, or Rapa Nui, is one of the most isolated places in the world. It’s part of Chile, but it’s more than 3,500 km from the South American continent. Easter Island is famous for its enormous stone statues, moai (pronounced “mow-eye”). The moai are human figures made from rock. They have very large heads and bodies. They don’t have legs. The tallest moai is almost 10 meters high. The moai represent important chiefs. They were placed to protect the lands of different tribes. The winners used to knock down the moai of their enemies to bury their faces.

Nobody knows how people transported the moai. People using ropes and wooden rollers. This was very difficult because the moai were extremely heavy. There are more than 800 moai on Easter Island. Nowadays they are an important tourist attraction.

Did you know?
Rapa Nui is called Easter Island because it was first discovered by Europeans on Easter Sunday, 1722.
